"Look at all the rain!" Fuzzy groaned to Wuzzy one dark, dreary day. "It's sure no fun having to stay in the house all the time . . . there's nothing to do!"

"It's never going to stop raining!" Wuzzy replied wearily. "It's going to rain and rain until everything is covered with water!"

"That's the way it was when Noah built his ark!" Uncle Barney spoke up.

"Say," Fuzzy said with sudden excitement, "that gives me an idea! Can we float our boats outside, Uncle Barney? Huh? Please?"

"Why," Uncle Barney snapped, "I should say not! In all this rain?"

"Well, golly!" Wuzzy chimed in. "How could we float boats without the rain?"

"All I know," Uncle Barney stormed, "is that you cannot—I repeat—absolutely can not get wet!"

"Uncle Barney," Fuzzy said with a snap of his fingers, "would you let us go outside if we wore our new skin diving suits? They cover us. . ."

"No, Fuzzy!" Uncle Barney said firmly. "You'd get your heads wet and I said I absolutely. . ."

". . . don't want us to get wet!" The brothers finished the sentence for him.

"I just can't understand you boys!" Uncle Barney sighed wearily. "Here you have a whole house full of toys to play with and still you can't find anything to do!"

"Well," Fuzzy said stoutly, "we can't help it! We're just not used to being in the house all day long! We've played with our toys and read our comic books and watched television and . . . and . . . there just isn't anything left to do!"

"Yeah!" Wuzzy agreed.

"Oh, yes, there is!" Uncle Barney announced with a mischievous glint in his eyes.

"What?" Fuzzy and Wuzzy asked eagerly. "We're ready for anything!"

"Good!" Uncle Barney laughed as he shoed them upstairs to their room. "You'll just about have time enough to take your baths before I call you for dinner! Get undressed and I'll run a nice hot tub for you!"

Leaving the little bears grumbling in their room, Uncle Barney prepared the bath water for them and went downstairs to see about fixing dinner.

Fifteen minutes later he called up from the bottom of the steps. "Yoo-hoo!"

There was no answer, but Uncle Barney heard lots of laughing and splashing going on.

"Those rascals!" he said, tiptoeing up the stairs. "They really do like to take a bath, but just won't admit it!"

He knocked on the bathroom door. "Boys, dinner's ready! How're you doing?"

"Oh, pretty well!" Fuzzy replied with a laugh. "And we're doing exactly what you said we should too!"

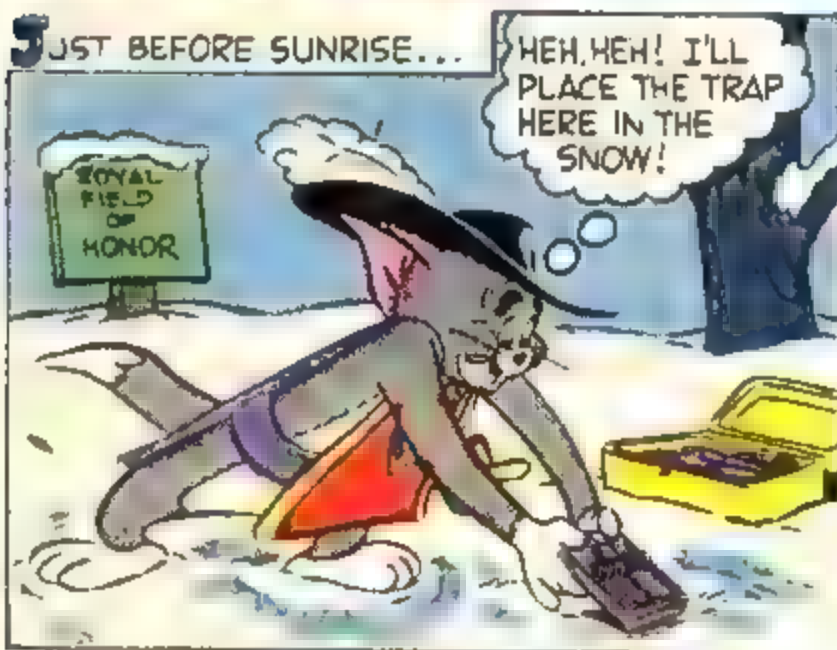

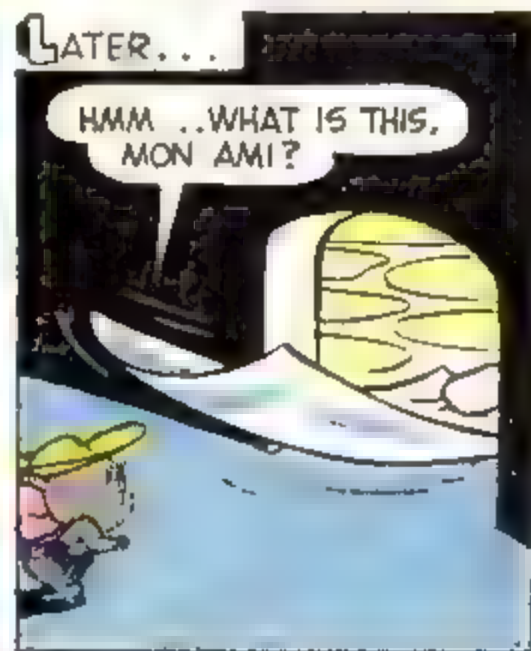

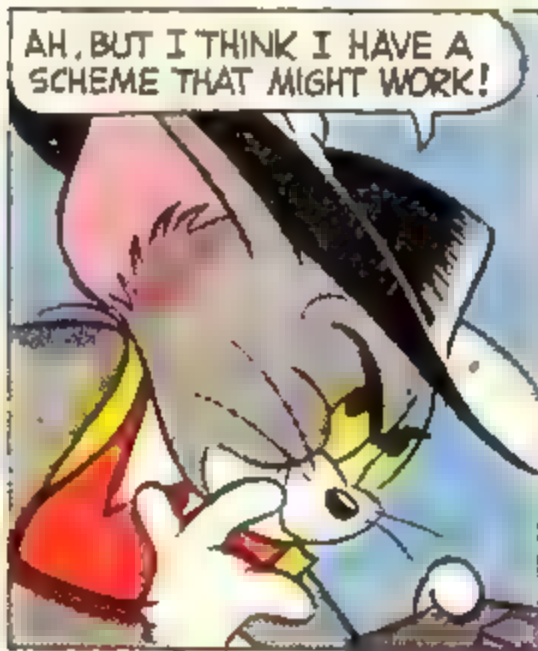

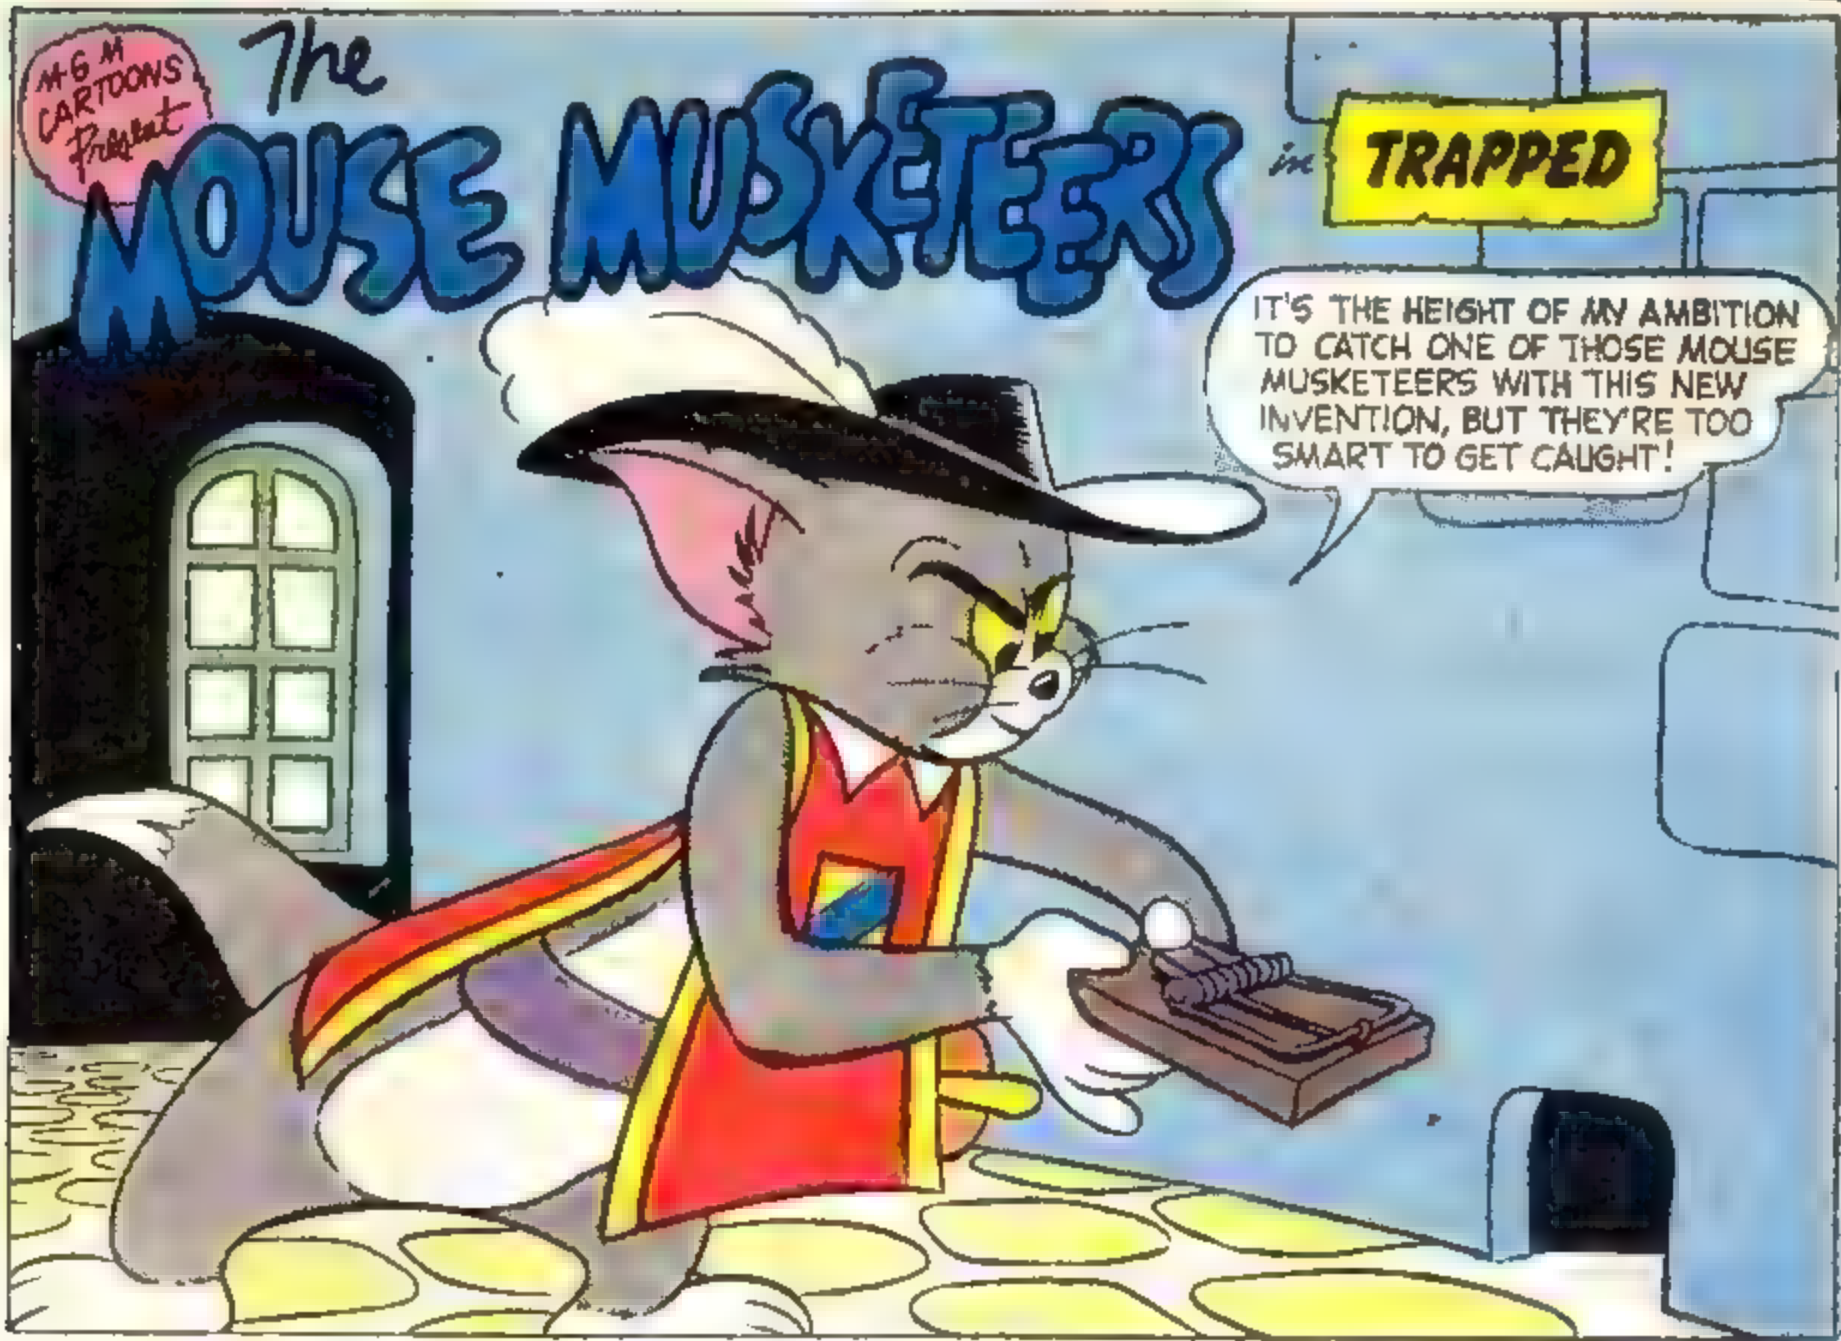

"What do you mean?" Uncle Barney asked suspiciously.

"Come in and see!" Wuzzy called.

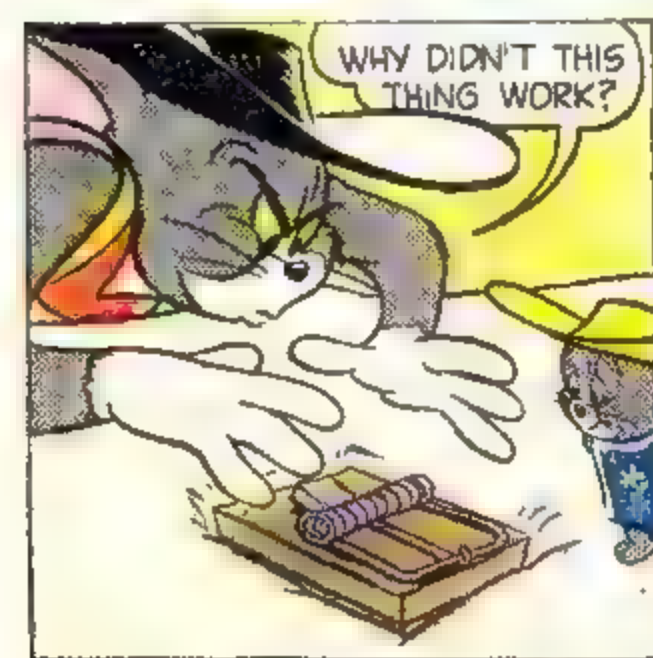

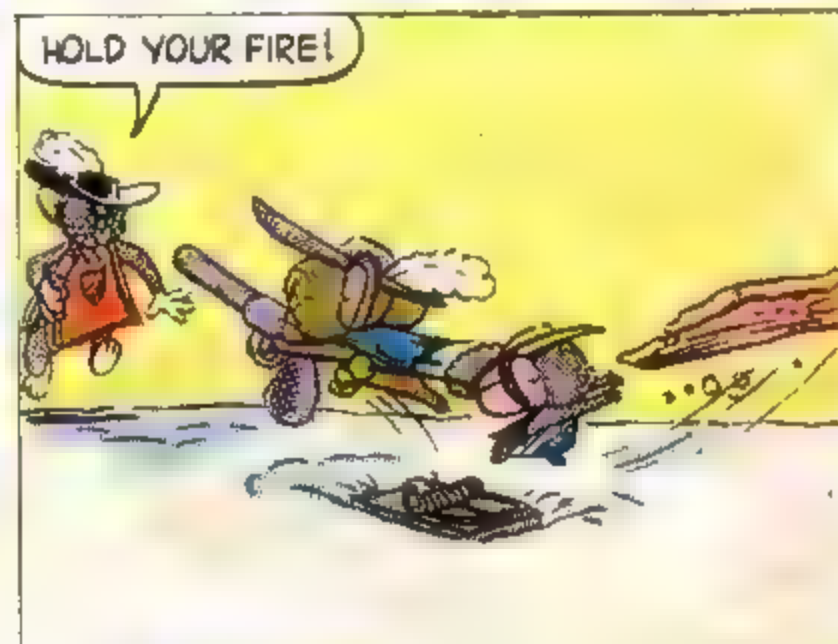

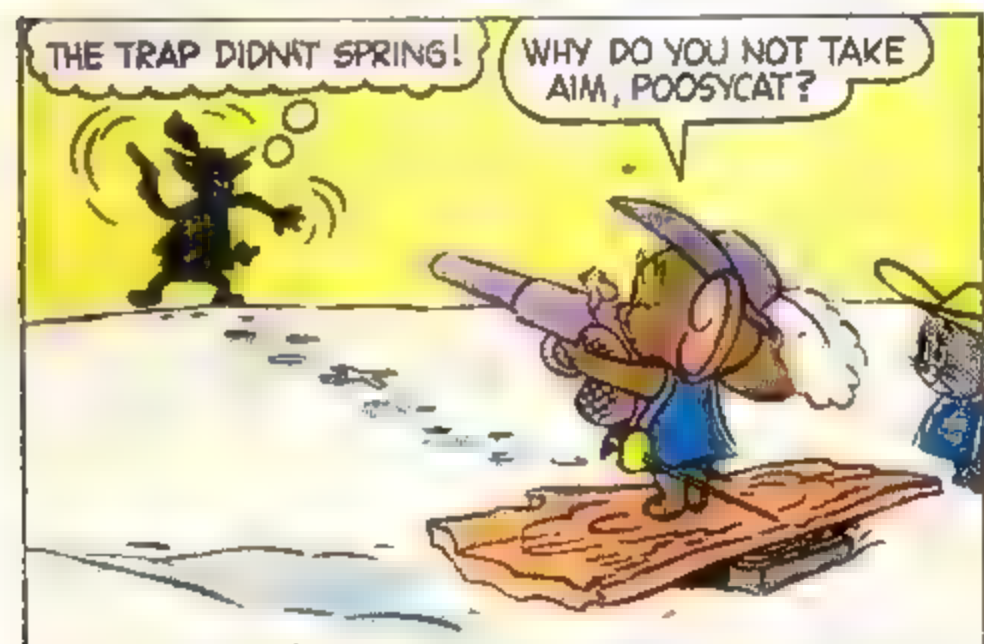

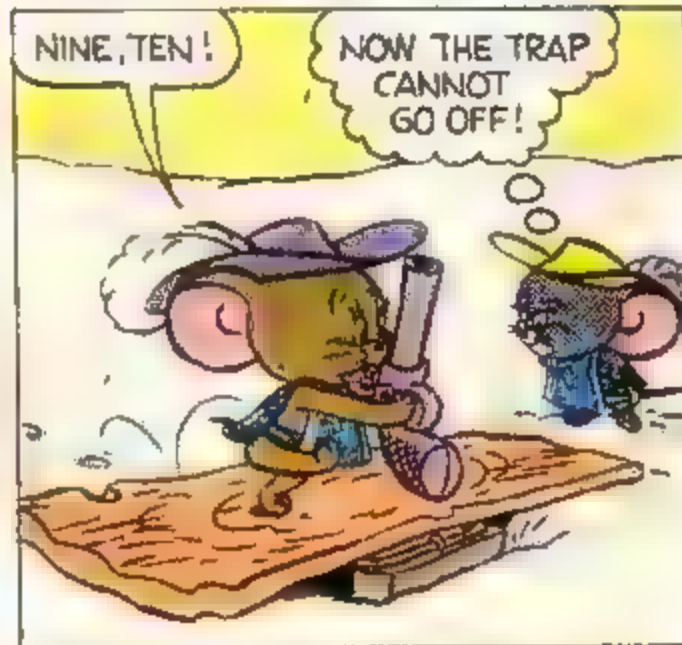

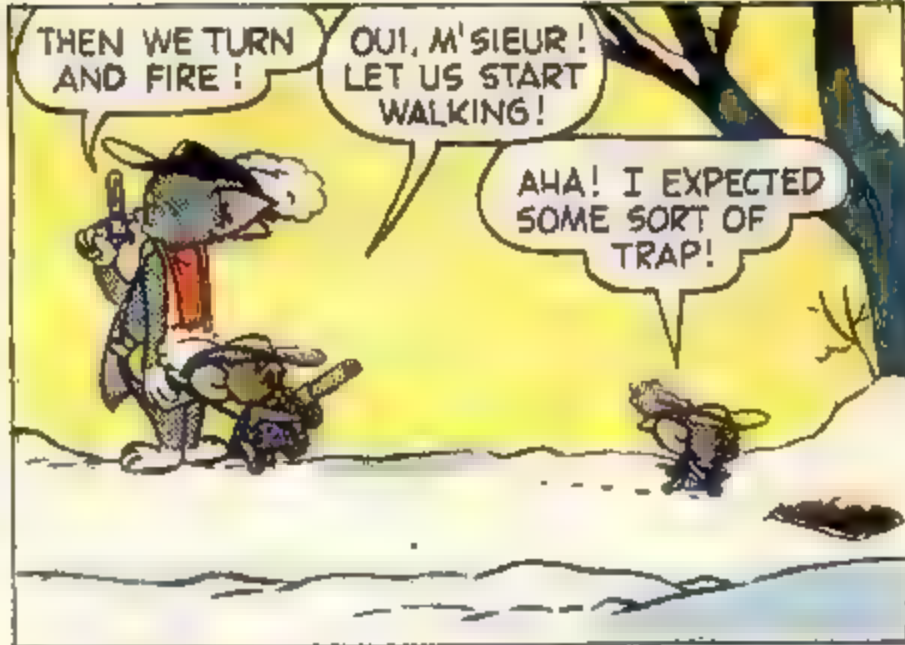

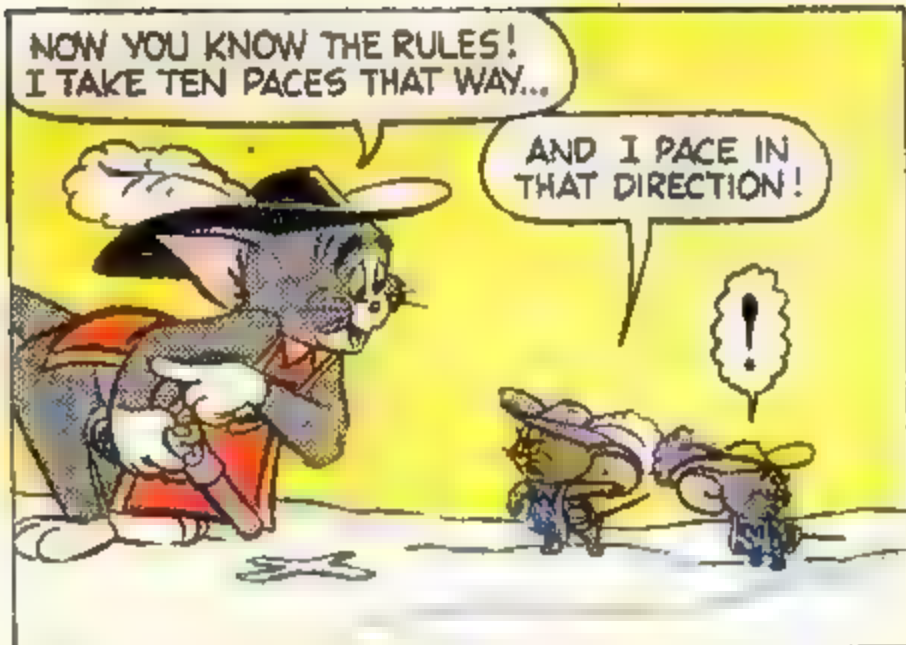

Uncle Barney opened the door and stopped with amazement. The little bears were sitting happily in the bathtub—covered from neck to toe in their skin diving suits—and floating their boats!

"Well!" they laughed together, "you told us we shouldn't get wet!"
